Business in Mexico

When discussing business meetings in Mexico, we can see that they are vastly different than they are in the United States. The first thing I read stated that it is expected of foreign businessmen to show up on time, even though Mexican businessmen can be as long as 30 minutes late, which shows a little disrespect if they know the other person will be there. Turning down a drink when offered surprised me as well, since I usually turn down drinks when offered so that I don't inconvenience the other person who would be getting it for me. They also seem very judgmental, or at least observant, since what you arrive in, where you stay, and how
